CIA Official Speaks At Naval War College

Naval warfare students and the staff of the Naval War College heard Lyman B. Kirkpatrick Jr., executive director of the Central Intelligence Agency speak on "The U. S. National Intelligence System" today at the War College.

Kirkpatrick, who in March 1960 was chosen one of the 10 outstanding career officers in the federal government by the National Service League, discussed the role of the intelligence community in the formulation and implementation of national strategy. He also evaluated the relative capabilities of the U. S. and the USSR intelligence systems on a worldwide basis.

Following his lecture, he was the luncheon guest of Vice Admiral Bernard L. Austin, Naval War College president.
